} OF TUMULT BEHAVIOURAL *ENFORCEMENT within the theatre of experience as KILL `EM COMPUTER GAMES was the subject of a very guarded email exchange that occurred before 11 SEPTEMBER 2001 with Christopher Cowan as the author of Spiral Dynamics which is a data-based, psychological approach to understanding worldviews or systems of thinking held by individuals, organisations and societies. It is concerned with:

- how people respond to the world around them in given circumstances and with their particular coping abilities (rather than categorising people as `types`)

- how people think about things (conceptualisation), rather than what they think about (concepts) – for example, is their thinking binary and absolutist (`if it's not black, then it must be white'), or do they acknowledge and seem comfortable with ambiguity and uncertainty?

- complex questions about change including `HOW should WHO lead WHOM to do WHAT and WHEN?'

He didn't want the nature of the subject and provisional hypothesis to be made publicly known but nevertheless had a professional regard for my informal opinion on this, and because of such dialog it is my subsequent view that the gaming computer community was the initial #120 - FALCON'S LAIR for the promulgation of it's T.U.R.D white supremacist philosophy."
