You will be but putty in our hands before long and soon we'll bring you into a compliant state of #123 - JUDGMENT SENSIBILITY.

"Surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter's clay: for shall the work say of him that made it, He #451 - made me not?

Or shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, He had no understanding?" [Isaiah 29:16 (KJV)]

But don't have a fallen CREST  {ie. LE COQ} about that Mr Macron.

NOTE: The Gallic rooster is a symbol of France and personifies the early inhabitants of France, the Gauls. France identified herself to the cockerel for its courage, determination and virility when defending the flock. The Constitution of 1958 does not recognise the Gallic rooster as an official symbol of the French Republic unlike the Tricolour, the Motto and the National Anthem.

The rooster's morning cock-a-doodle-doo is driven by an internal clock, finds new research, suggesting the male chickens really know the time of day.

The study, detailed today (March 18) in the journal Current Biology, found that roosters put under constant light conditions will still crow at the crack of dawn.

Le COQ appears in a glorious position on the remarkable gilded gate of the Élysée Palace. During the First World War the fierce Gallic rooster was featured against the German Imperial eagle. It was featured in many war memorials across the country. Today the Gallic rooster is not recognised as an official symbol of the French Republic.
